houses of Germany, sacrificed his name and title of Prince Hohenlohe, and became a mere ordinary noble, with the title of Count Hermersberg, granted by the King of Wurtemberg. Then he was rble to wed his inamorata on a footing of perfect equality.

The ex-prince took up his residence with her in a villa and large grounds at Gross Lichterfeld, in the neighborhood of Berlin, and, with the object of turning his American business training to account, embarked in all sorts of commercial and industrial enterprises He'became interested in the so-called princes' trust, in which his cldest brother, the Duke of Ujest, his cousin, the Duke of Ratibor, Prince Maximilian Fuerstenberg, the Prince of Pless, the Prince of Donnersmarck, Prince Dohna, Count Douglas and sev-eral other of the Kalser's particular friends and cronies are concerned, and which has in operation mines of every description, shipyards, steamship lines. railroads. manufactories and even newspapers. Count Hermersberg, moreover, not content with this, embarked in several ventures of his own, notably, the building of a sanatorium and casino at Madeira. It is these outside ventures that have ruined him, and in which also he has sunk the fortune which his wife inherited from her grandfather Renz, and it is owing to his connection with the princes' trust that on the gazetting of his insolvency there was so heavy a fall in the trust's shares on the Berlin Stock Exchange last

The bankruptcy of ex-Prince Hugo Hohenlohe serves to teach one lesson at any rate, namely, that in order to succeed in business one has to be to the manner born. It is necessary to be trained up thereto from the earliest childhood. When one has been reared on totally different lines until man-hood, it is ridiculous to believe that by means of a few months' stay in a foreign business house as a volunteer. one can obtain a thorough mastery of business methods, which are necessary to succeed in the flerce competition that prevails in the commercial and industrial world. All that one can obtain in that fashion is a mere smattering of knowledge, which, by destroying diffidence and caution, is far more dangerous than complete ignorance. ance. There is hardly a sincle man of title who, having been reared to other callings, has embarked in a business career, who can be said to have made a lasting success, and ex-Prince Hugo Hohenlohe's bankruptcy is merely one more of a long list of bluely one more of a long list of blue-blooded failures.

There is no doubt that the ex-prince's marriage has contributed to his downfall. For his brother-in-law, his downfall. For his brother-in-law, Count Lucchesi Pali, the husband of his wife's sister, was arrested some time ago in Berlin on charges of fraud, in connection with the circulation of checks upon banks where he had no account, and when in jail, made the most of his "clationship with the exprince, and even insisted that he was in partnership with him. Another of the brothers-in-law of Hugo Hohenlohe, namely, his wife's brother, Francis Renz, was also overtaken by financis Renz, was also overtaken by finan-in which, of course, his Hohenlohe relationship was emphasized by the newspapers. Francis Renz was married to that magnificently beautiful gymnast Oceana, who had a great vogue on this side of the Atlantic some thirty years ago.

The Hohenlohes are related to many of the reigning houses of Europe, notably to those of Great Britain, of Austria and of Prussia. Thus, Princess Agatha Hohenlohe, although a Roman Catholic, was married the other day to Prince Frederick William of Prussia, at Potsdam. Prince Jean Ho-henlohe is the husband of Archduchess Anne of Austria. Prince Ernest Ho henlohe, formerly regent of the Duchies of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, is married to Princess Alexandra of Great Britain, a granddaughter of Queen Victoria, whose half-sister, Princess Feodor Leiningen, married a Hohenlohe and was the grandmether. Hohenlohe, and was the grandmother of the present German Empress.

Through his appointment as Lord Lieutenant of Warwickshire, in succession to the late Marquis of North-ampton, the Earl of Craven, now commanding the Yeomen of the Guard, be comes the first personage of the county, and, as chief representative there of the sovereign, is entitled to pre-cedence over everbyody else; a precedence over everbyody else; a precedence shared by his American wife, daughter of Mrs. Bradley Martin, formerly of New York. Although the patent of the office bears the sign manual of the sovereign, the dignity is conferred upon the nomination of the Prime Minister, who makes a point or always selecting for the office a new research. always selecting for the office a peer, or some territorial magnate who has rendered services in the past, and is vices in the future to his party.

In this way the entire county magvisiting with especial severity offenses as against the game laws, poaching being considered the most beloous crime of the calendar. The lord lieutenant of the county wears a gorgeous uniform of scarlet and gold with a plumed hat. It is, in fact, the uniform of a militia or territorial general, that being really the military rank of this the chief dignitary of the county.

Lord Craven's country place in Warwickshire is Coombe Abbey, near Coventry, which, prior to the Reformation, was a Cistercian monastery, founded in the reign of King Stephen. It has been in the hands of Lord Craven's ancestors since its purchase by Sir William Craven, a tailor, who was Lord Mayor of London in 1611.

This Lord Mayor's son was the first Earl Craven, who distinguished himself so greatly by his romantic devo-tion to King Charles L's sister, Princess Elizabeth, consort of the King of Bohemia. She made her home at Coombe Abbey after her widowhood and throughout the closing years of her life, and, while the earl is set down in official records as having died at the age of ninety, a bachelor, there is every reason to believe that he was secretly married to the Queen. Coroner's Jury Blames Its Caretakers as Well as Railroad Employes.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Bowling Green, Va., July 11,—An quest was held over the body of Clarence W. Madison, aged about two years, son of Thomas Madison, of Youngstown, Ohio, who was killed by a northbound train of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad on last Tuesday evening. The jury, after several sessions, returned a verdict of negligence on the part of those having charge of the child, in not properly watching over it, and also negligence on the part of the employes of the railroad company in charge of the train in not watching the track. The child was in charge of its aunt, a girl about fourteen years old, who left the child in the back yard and went to the potato patch. When she returned the child was missing, and although she searched for him could not find him. His body was found about a half an hour after the girl missed him on the track by the sec
